14 Synonyms of Conceit

In the extensive Pāli-Myanmar Dictionary, which has around 24 volumes, there is an interesting exposition about conceit (māna) in connection to the Pāli scriptures. I was not able to find the reference to the list given there, but I find it very interesting and worth sharing with you. I add my interpretation of each of the synonyms, so that you can better understand the meaning. You are most welcome to interpret them in your way and possibly share your understanding with me. :-)

0000-00000 000000 0000 (00) (00000000000
00000000 (00)0000 - 14 synd	onyms of māna (conceit)

When objects such as forms, sounds, smells, arise in their respective faculties there arises the attachment to them, not realizing their impermanent nature. This is based on the idea that "I am perceiving", or "This is my perception", or "I am perception". Through such conceit one is grasping an object by strong attachment, like a dog voraciously biting a perfectly clean bone.

The idea that "I am" creates the idea "I want to be". With this clinging for existence (bhava taṇhā) one generates the craving for new birth (bhavanikanti), which is most prominent at the very moment of one's death. For Arahants there is no craving for new birth (bhavanikanti), hence they are no more born in Saṃsāra after they pass away.

Although these five aggregates, namely body, feelings, perceptions, volitions (/decisions), and consciousness, are changing every moment just like a candle fire, living beings call it permanent, pleasant, 'self'. As is explained in the Commentary for Sāmaññaphala Sutta (DNA 2) in Satisampajaññakathā, "each moment this body arises & passes the mind changes with it, following without space, occurring like a stream of river." Although both the body and mind are constantly changing in dependence of previous causes, ignorance (avijjā) and conceit present them as 'self'.

Conceited person not only considers his/her worldly attainments as sufficient and superb, but he/she also commits deeds that create unwholesome kamma – thus being unable to proceed in the Noble Path. Laziness and satisfaction with worldly pleasures are opposite to Eightfold Noble Path - the practice of sīla (morality), samādhi (meditation), and paññā (wisdom).

When there is conceit in the mind, there is also craving. Certain yogis report, after some experience in their vipassanā meditation, that when greed (lobha) arises in their mind they perceive as if their mind stuck on the object and just slowly separated like two objects glued by an old glue. In an untrained mind the separation is as difficult as in the case of superglue.

A conceited person suffers not only when strong greed arises in him/her, but also when hatred and dissatisfaction arise, whether toward an object or a living being. Attachment to views (diṭṭhupādāna) is the cause of one's dissatisfaction with the vicissitudes of the world, namely gain (lābha), loss (alābha), fame (yasa), loneliness (ayasa), blame (nindā), praise (pasaṃsa), pleasure (sukha), and displeasure (dukkha). Suffering caused by one's conceited mind is often disregarded, unknown, and therefore not examined, not analyzed. Only examination and analysis of one's mental suffering will lead to its utter cessation.

7. 0000/00000 - - Bandhana/Saṃyojana (bond) - may bind.

Conceit doesn't bind oneself only to the idea of "I am such", "I am not such", "My self is such", "My self is not such", "This is me", "This is not me", but it also binds to the perceptions of one's relatives and friends, believing "this is my father", "this is my mother", "this is my teacher", binding oneself to them, hindering oneself from own wise reflection, own search of truth. Consequently, when they pass away, one is crying, lamenting, veiling, losing the excellent opportunity to reflect on death as the universal nature of all living beings. Conceit also makes one bound to one's property, success, and respect, hindering him/her from letting go, freedom, Nibbāna.

8. 0000 - 000000000 - Kiñcana (trouble) - may cause unrest [/"may shake"].

When one is successful, he/she worries that the success may be lost. When one is not successful, he/she worries that it won't be better. Being thus distressed and anxious about one's success, there is no space for peace, no space for meditation. Even those who are completely free from greed (lobha) and hatred (dosa) but still have some remnants of ignorance (avijjā), i.e. the	ne Non-

Returnes ( Anāgāmī ) may be subject to unrest in their mind.

9. On - On One of thicket) - is difficult to recognize like a dense (/"tangled") forest.

For a yogi it is most important that he/she exterminates their conceit. But this is possible only through careful observation of impermanence (aniccā) and unsatisfactoriness (dukkha) in all phenomena. When one tries to search for not-self (anattā) directly, thinking "I will get rid of conceit", it will rarely be successful. Often-times people who are very generous, live ethically, and much meditate, think "now I am no more conceited", "now I am humble", and beating their breasts, they proudly boast to their friends and foes not recognizing their own folly.

Conceit is especially strong when it is joined with wrongly directed intelligence. The sufferer then makes all effort to make excuses, rationalize and substantiate whatever bad deed he/she does. Thus the conceit covers the truth of one's demerit and bars the Noble Path.

11. Dann - Dannann Dannan Dannann Dannann Dannann - Anusaya (tendency) - may forever (/always) dwell in the mind-continuum of beings.

"Anamataggoyam bhikkhave saṃsāro" are the words of the Buddha, recorded in Tiṇakaṭṭha Sutta (SN 2.4.1.1.). It means "monks, the cycle of rebirth (Saṃsāra) is without a knowable end." Living beings are craving for their illusory ,selves' and thus move from birth to birth, from death to death, from hell to hell, from suffering to suffering. Birth in heaven and human realm are extremely rare, explained the Buddha in Nakhasikha Sutta (SN 2.9.2.).

12. 0000 - 000000000 000000000 - Kilesa (affliction) - may burn, may oppress.

Lust is a very rough emanation of conceit, and it is also well known as 'burning'. There were many men and women, who committed suicide and other self-torture just become they were infatuated and not satisfied. When a person who expects respect and fame is disrespected and lonely, he/she may become seriously sick, and possibly die. According to Upāli Sutta (MN 56), this once happened to Nigaṇṭha Nāthaputtha, the leader of jains, when he heard the householder Upāli's eulogy on the Buddha. Being so distressed with his loss of respect and admiration, Nigaṇṭha Nāthaputtha vomited hot blood and passed away.

Conceit is based on one's perception. And perception, as the Buddha explained in Pheṇapiṇḍūpama Sutta (SN 3.1.5(10).3.) is like a mirage seen in the noon in summer. A wise man looks at it, examines it, and understands that it is void, unsubstantial. When one perceives one's success or attainments as "my success", "my attainment", he/she is no more progressing on the Noble Path, rather he/she is stuck and not progressing at all. In that sutta the Buddha also explained, that body is comparable to foam on river, feelings are comparable to water bubbles that arise and disappear in rain, volitions (/decisions) are comparable to the woodless banana plantain, and consciousness is as empty as an illusionist's illusion. All of this body and mind is unsubstantial, void, and thus worth detachment.

14. Decause it has the nature of arrogance, it is same as madness.

For conceited person it is very easy to descend to arrogance, to overestimation, to forgetfulness of one's true nature. As such, one then presents oneself as the boss, as the best, as the master – being a slave, a looser, a madman.

May we all soon get free from all conceit, And thus attain the bliss of boundless freedom, Nibbāna. Monk Sarana
